Our Mission

We work to build strong bridges between the inmates and community, and bring forth the voices of inmates. Central to our work is training ourselves, loved ones and supporters in self-advocacy through public protest, networking, coalition building, letter writing and contacting prison officials and holding elected officials accountable.

Our Goals

Help gain compassionate release for prisoners with serious illnesses, and ages inmates.

Promote productivity and rehabilitation.

Support community and family bonds.

End the use of long-term isolation.

Develop meaningful mental health, educational and vocational programs.

Improve medical care and living conditions for inmates living with HIV/AIDS/HepC & other life threatening conditions.

Make rules and regulations governing inmates part of State law.

Pre-psychological evaluation of potential correctional officers

Comments By Robert Saunders:

Correctional institutions are expected to make communities safer. However, high rates of incarceration and little investment in rehabilitation fuel recidivism and increase problems for the communities hit hardest by incarceration.

If correctional systems are to perform a public safety function, the public must be able to hold institutions at least partly accountable for the impact inmates have on the communities upon returning.

That requires measures of success that can be compared across systems, including recidivism, family reunification and employment after release and knowledge about conditions of confinement that influence those outcomes.
